

ABSTRACT

A method of identifying compounds that deplete mast cells without depleting other related cells is described. The invention further relates to compounds identified by the screening method and their uses in treating diseases.